

'Just Give Us A Year'

Beware the Sweet Talk

We've all heard the pitch from our executives and supervisors, made with a wink and a smile. Just give us a year without a union and you'll see that we can work together in a cordial, respectful relationship. Here, have some popcorn/pancakes/lemonade!

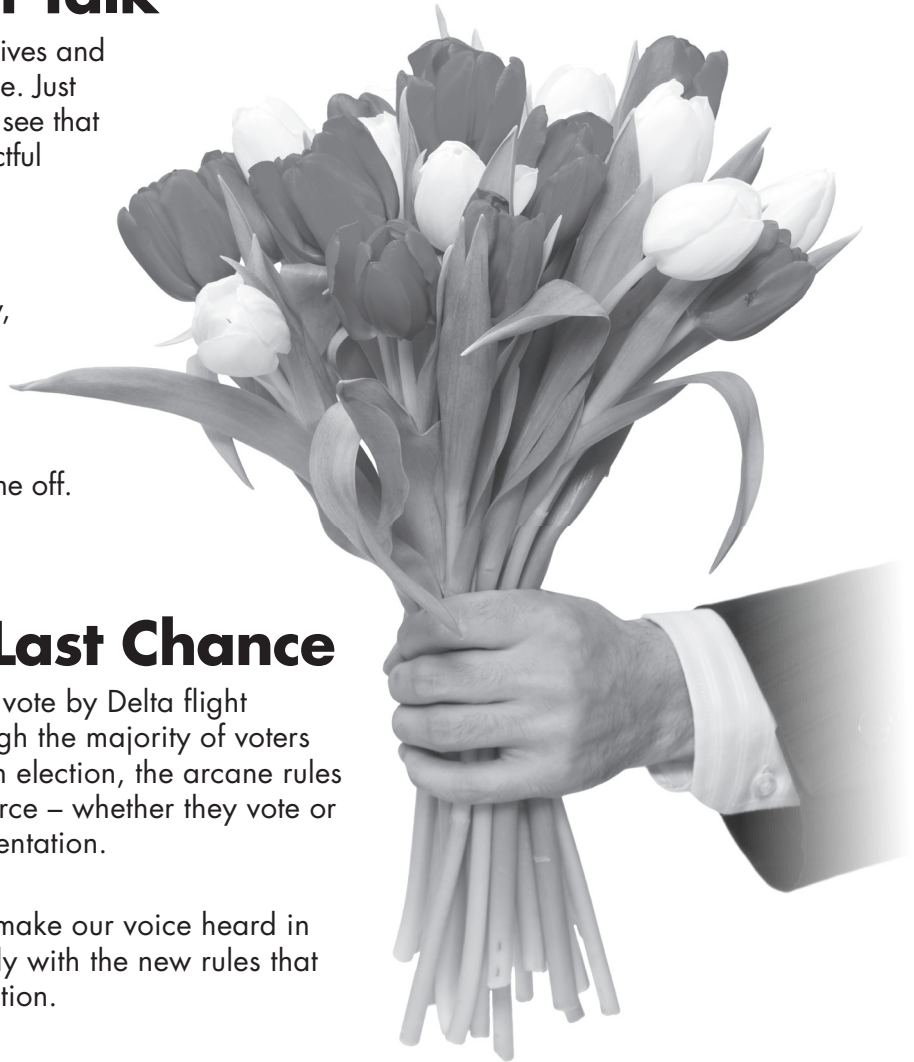

They're trying to be our best buddies now, with their special events and lounge goodies, but don't be fooled. This is a well-orchestrated ploy right out of the union-buster's cookbook. Once the representation vote is over, the masks come off. We've seen it time and again.

This May Be Our Last Chance

We are nearing the third representation vote by Delta flight attendants over the past decade. Although the majority of voters have wanted AFA representation in each election, the arcane rules requiring a majority of the entire workforce – whether they vote or not – have stymied our desire for representation.

We may never have a better chance to make our voice heard in winning industry-leading pay – especially with the new rules that allow a majority of us to decide the election.

The time to decide is NOW!
