

Why is ATA Challenging Our Right to Vote?

Lobby Opposes Employees' Interests

The Air Transport Association (ATA) lobbies Congress and federal agencies for the airline industry. Like the lobbies for big oil, pharmaceutical companies and Wall Street banks, ATA represents powerful corporate interests.

They don't stand up for the interests of customers or employees. They often work against them, as ATA did by lobbying against OSHA health and safety protections for flight attendants.

Delta Backs ATA's Challenge to Democratic Elections

Delta Air Lines is the only major "legacy" carrier to join ATA's court suit to stop the National Mediation Board's more democratic rules for representation elections.

Delta's actions reveal more than a desire to keep the deck stacked in representation elections. It tells us there's only one safe way to make sure the interests of our profession are fairly represented.
